United States Patent5,555,645*Joslin*September 17, 1996

Reversing clothes dryer and method therefor

Abstract

A domestic clothes dryer is operated in both a forward and a reverse direction. The dryer blower has a reduced air flow rate in the reverse direction. The reduced air flow in the reverse direction and the reverse tumbling increases the heat transferred to the articles being dried, thereby improving dryer performance.

United States PatentJoslin , et al.*5,444,924*August 29, 1995

Electronic control of clothes dryer

Abstract

A control system for a clothes dryer is disclosed. A microprocessor monitors the heated inlet air temperature and the exhaust temperature. If the inlet temperature exceeds a high limit value a given number of times, an air blockage indicator is activated. Degrees of dryness are measured by the number of times the inlet temperature has dropped below a threshold value while the heater is off because the exhaust temperature has exceeded a desired value. An estimated drying time is calculated and displayed to the user based on a linear function of the inlet and exhaust temperatures measured at the beginning of the cycle and again a short time later.

Gradual heat reduction for a clothes dryer

Abstract

A method and apparatus is disclosed for the gradual reduction of heat in a clothes dryer. The heater runs until a high limit is reached. The heater is then turned off and the high limit reduced by a factor. The heater is turned on when a low limit is reached and the low limit is reduced by a factor. This continues until the high and low limits reach minimum values. The values of all these temperatures may be varied according to the fabric being dried.

Washer and dryer communication

Abstract

A communications channel is provided between a washer and a dryer. When the dryer is drying, a signal is sent to the washer to extend the final spin operation in order to continue to mechanically remove water. While the dryer operation continues, fabric type information and fabric quantity information for a load are provided from the washer to the dryer. This information is used to indicate an estimated drying time for the load and to set the dryer fabric type selection.
